History:

Introduced to Northern Europe from the US, garlic bread has come to be associated with the pizza, served as it is in many restaurants as an appetizer or an accompaniment to the Italian speciality.
 Garlic bread proves most popular in Northern European countries where the herb itself has traditionally been less well-received.
 The baguette is the most popular base for garlic bread. The baguette presentation is sliced three- quarters of the way through at regular intervals along its length and the herbbutter mixture spread into the cracks.
 When frozen garlic baguettes were first made available in Germany.
 Though often eaten as a snack in the evening, accompanied by a glass of wine or beer, garlic bread tends more often than not, to be bought in the summer months, during the barbecue season.
